We aim to contribute to the creation of a national database that tracks potentially dangerous substances. This helps promote awareness and enables individuals to make informed decisions about substances discovered in their area. Furthermore, public access to this data allows researchers, policymakers, and concerned citizens to work together towards understanding and addressing the implications of these substances on our communities and the environment.

We will be posting our lab reports publicly on our website. This will include a comprehensive display of each sample, featuring a photo of the sample, a unique sample name of your choice, our interpretation of the detected substances, as well as the city and state the sample was sent from.

We will NOT include your name, organization, street address, zip code, phone number, or email. Your privacy is important to us. We will keep your personal information confidential, and will only use it for communication purposes related to your order.

We understand the importance of easily identifying your sample. That's why we encourage you to pick a unique sample name. This way, when you visit our website and view the spreadsheet, you will be able to quickly locate and identify your specific sample. For your convenience, we will provide a download link to the full lab report, enabling you to access detailed information about your sample at any time.
